Description and Rationale

This data set was originally compiled by Paul R. Hensel, director of the Issue Correlates of War (ICOW) research project at Florida State University. The variables on reservations attached to acceptance of the ICJ optional clause were added by Jackie Rubin and Sara McLaughlin Mitchell

The Multilateral Treaties of Pacific Settlement (MTOPS) data set is a compilation of global and regional institutions -- including both intergovernmental organizations and multilateral treaties -- that call for the pacific settlement of disputes among their members (or signatories). This was originally meant to allow empirical testing of the theoretical expectation that joint membership in such organizations should affect the settlement of political disputes among member states (i.e., that the regional and/or global institutional context can promote the peaceful settlement of disputes and can discourage resort to militarized means by states involved in a dispute). A later expansion of the data set allowed it to address the notion of a territorial integrity norm, as discussed in Zacher's 2001 IO article (which suggests that there is an increasingly prominent global norm against the revision of territorial borders).

Of course, the data set is not limited to these purposes, and it may be useful for a variety of additional purposes.

Qualifying Treaties and Organizations

To be included, a treaty or organization must include at least five members. Smaller or bilateral treaties are excluded from this compilation; such institutions are not expected to exert the same type of influence or authority with regard to member states as larger institutions.¹ Furthermore, bilateral treaties and alliances are far too common to be compiled meaningfully in a data set of this scope. Qualifying institutions can include intergovernmental organizations, military alliances, multilateral legal treaties, and any other treaty or institution that explicitly calls for pacific dispute settlement among members/signatories.

Each qualifying institution must call explicitly for the peaceful settlement of disputes among member states, either in an organization's official charter or in a subsequent treaty or agreement. This call may involve one or more specific procedures for dispute settlement (such as treaties requiring arbitration of disputes that can not be resolved through bilateral negotiations), but this is not necessary. The important thing is that the treaty must contain an obligation for signatory states to settle their disputes peacefully. Simply mentioning the desirability of peace (or peaceful dispute settlement) in a treaty preamble, or calling for members to pursue or promote peace in the region, does not qualify a treaty/institution for this data set unless there is a corresponding obligation elsewhere in the document.

It should be noted that simply calling for the avoidance of the use of force (as in just about any non-aggression pact) does not qualify; there must be an explicit call for the pacific settlement of disputes between member states. This also excludes institutions that only make general calls for cooperation, that only call for cooperation on economic or social issues, that only obligate members to settle issues related to the treaty itself, or that call for states to observe previous treaties (even if these previous treaties relate to pacific dispute settlement); the treaty or institution must explicitly address the peaceful settlement of disputes generally (a good rule of thumb in evaluating a prospective treaty is whether it would require peaceful settlement of such matters as disputes over territorial sovereignty or over the usage of cross-border rivers; if not, then the treaty would not qualify for this data set).

It should be noted that this data set only includes one treaty obligation per organization or institution. While a given regional or global organization may produce numerous treaties over the years that call for pacific settlement of disputes among members, only the first such treaty is considered to qualify for this data set; the others are considered to reflect the same normative influence as the first. It seems more reasonable to consider the leadership and/or members of a given treaty/institution as working for peace on behalf of all of the treaty/institution's commitments and obligations together than to consider them working separately on behalf of each relevant treaty that the organization has produced. Two exceptions are made to this rule of one obligation per institution: (1) where the institution produces a second treaty that adds further members beyond the members of the institution itself, as with ASEAN's opening of the Treaty of Amity and Cooperation in Southeast Asia to numerous additional states beyond ASEAN's members, who already qualify on the basis of the Declaration of ASEAN Concord; and (2) where the institution has one treaty that contained either a pacific dispute settlement or territorial integrity obligation (but not both) and subsequently produces another treaty that contains the other.

Charters vs. Later Treaties

Several organizations' original charters or founding treaties do not explicitly call for the peaceful settlement of disputes among their members, although subsequent treaties signed under the auspices of the organizations do so. In such cases this data set records membership for the organization as a whole, as well as signatories for the subsequent treaty. For example, the Statute of the Council of Europe does not contain either a peaceful dispute settlement obligation or a territorial integrity obligation, so it does not qualify for this data set, but the COE's later Strasbourg Treaty does.

Both the original organization (e.g. the Council of Europe) and the later qualifying treaty (e.g. the Strasbourg Treaty) are included in the treaty-level data set that is included in this download (mtops.dta). Only the qualifying treaties are included in the state-year-level (mtopssyr.dta) and dyad-year-level (mtopssdyr.dta) data sets, though. Users wishing to include data on the original organizations in their analyses, perhaps to test an expectation that membership in such an institution might influence the behavior even of member states that have not signed the relevant treaties, may use the treaty-level data set to calculate the appropriate variables.

Data Format

The download of this data set includes treaty-level, state-year-level, and dyad-year-level data sets. All three data sets are provided in Stata format, created using Stata 9 on the Macintosh platform. Please contact Paul Hensel if you are unable to open these files and need them in an alternative format.

Conditions of Use

While this data set is freely available on the World Wide Web, I would prefer that users follow three conditions in using it. First, please cite the data set:

Paul R. Hensel (2005). "Multilateral Treaties of Pacific Settlement (MTOPS) Data Set, version 1.4." Available at <<http://data.icow.org>>.

You may also cite Paul Hensel's 2001 ISQ article, which was the first article to use (an earlier version of) this data in print:

Paul R. Hensel (2001). "Contentious Issues and World Politics: The Management of Territorial Claims in the Americas, 1816-1992." International Studies Quarterly 45, 1 (March): 81-109.

Second, if any problems or discrepancies are found, please contact me via email at <phensel@icow.org>, to explain what you feel is wrong and why (preferably with some type of supporting documentation). I will make every effort to respond as quickly as possible, and to make any needed corrections or additions. I have endeavored to collect and report this information as accurately as possible, but there is always some risk that information is either missing or incorrect (indeed, quite often I have found contradictory dates in different sources claiming to list signatures or ratifications of the same treaties); there is no benefit to me, users, or the scholarly community in general if known errors are not corrected.

Finally, as a professional courtesy, I would appreciate a copy of any article or paper that is written using this data. It is interesting to see what other scholars are doing with my data, and as I get a better idea of what people are using it for, I may be able to improve the data in future versions to help address topics that I had not originally anticipated.

Version History

Version 1.4 (July 2006)

- This is a major worldwide update that should bring the data set up to date for the entire world (data set users: please let me know if you believe I have missed any treaties or organizations that qualify, in any region of the world at any time since 1816).
- New treaties: added a number of treaties that were signed (or organizations that added new qualifying treaties) after earlier versions of this data set were collected, that were determined to qualify on the basis of new information that had not previously been consulted, that included territorial integrity provisions but not pacific settlement provisions, or that qualified after clarification of several coding rules (Commonwealth/1971 Singapore Declaration, NAM, OIC, 1907 and 1923 General Treaties of Peace and Amity, Montevideo Convention, CAN/1989 Galapagos Declaration, German Confederation, Locarno, Litvinov Protocol, GUAM, Stability Pact for SE Europe, SEECF, UAMD, ECCAS, ECOWAS, SADC, COMESA, Cen-Sad, ICGLR, CENTO/Baghdad Pact, Treaty of Amity & Cooperation, CICA).
- Merged the 1992 CIS Declaration and 1993 CIS Charter with the general (1991 - present) CIS entry (since they covered the same dispute settlement provisions, although in more detail, and almost all of the same states). Also replaced the 1936 Treaty on Prevention of Controversies and 1936 Inter-American Treaty on Good Offices and Mediation with the 1936 Convention to Coordinate, Extend and Assure the Fulfillment of the Existing Treaties between the American States, which was signed at the same conference and which is more appropriate.

- Added states' attachment of reservations to their acceptance of the ICJ optional clause (helpfully contributed by Sara Mitchell and Jackie Rubin).
- Corrected several minor errors in the data, and addressed new developments to update data set through end of 2005 (e.g. replacement of OAU with AU).
- Removed several variables that were not being used and that can easily be merged in from other data sources if needed (3-letter COW state abbreviations and the Gleditsch/Ward system membership dates).
- To make the data easier to use, released both state-year and dyad-year-level versions of the data as well as the previous treaty-level data, and released all three data sets in Stata format.

Version 1.3 (August 2003)

- This was primarily an update of information on past treaties, rather than an exhaustive effort to search for new treaties or organizations to be added. This update was needed for some research that I was doing related to peaceful settlement norms in the Western Hemisphere; most work on other regions was left for the next update of the data set.
- Corrected several minor errors in the data, and addressed new developments to update data set through end of 2001.

Version 1.2 (May 2000)

- New treaties: expanded the scope of the data set by adding a number of Western Hemisphere treaties that did not have associated organizations.
- Separated codebook and documentation into separate files.

Version 1.1 (March 2000)

- Updated data set through the end of 1999, and corrected several minor errors.
- New treaties: expanded the scope of the data set beyond strictly international organizations by adding several international legal treaties/institutions (PCA, PCIJ/ICJ, Kellogg-Briand Pact).
- Added appendices listing sources consulted in compiling the data set, and listing cases I have investigated that do not currently qualify for inclusion in this data set.

Version 1.0 (April 1999)

- Original release. At this time, the data set was intended to be a list of regional and global IGOs whose founding treaties or charters explicitly called for pacific dispute settlement between members.

Future Plans for This Data Set

- Will add any new organizations or treaties that qualify under the data set's coding rules, and will continue to update existing treaties/organizations to reflect changing membership or status.

Among others, I am already aware of the following actual or pending changes:

--Montenegro became independent after breaking off from Serbia and Montenegro, the remainder of the former Yugoslavia. The new Montenegrin entity joined the COW system, UN, OSCE, and Stability Pact in June 2006 (among other obligations).

--Rio Pact: Mexico denounced the pact and announced its withdrawal in September 2002, but as of July 2006 it is still listed as a member on the OAS web site (it is only listed as making a denunciation, not a withdrawal).

--Andean Community: Venezuela withdrew from the community (and presumably all associated treaties) in April 2006.

--South American Community of Nations: this is likely to come into existence, at which point it should qualify for MTOPS (see the documentation in the current file of excluded treaties).

--Arab League: Libya threatened in October 2002 to withdraw, but as of July 2006 had not yet carried out this threat.

--CIS: Georgia, Ukraine, and Moldova all threatened to withdraw during 2005-2006, but as of July 2006 had not carried out these threats.

--SEECF: Moldova joined in May 2006.

--CSTO: Uzbekistan joined in June 2006.

--East African Community: the charter qualifies for MTOPS, but there are only three members right now. As of July 2006, negotiations were underway to add Rwanda and Burundi, which (if successful) would bring the EAC to five members and qualify for inclusion in this data set.

--SAARC: Afghanistan is likely to join in 2006 or 2007.

--CICA: South Korea joined in June 2006.

Acknowledgments

Any undertaking of this magnitude will inevitably benefit from the input of numerous scholars. Jackie Rubin and Sara Mitchell collected the data on reservations attached to recognition of ICJ compulsory jurisdiction. Ashley Leeds graciously shared information from her ATOP data set on military alliances that appeared to qualify for inclusion in this data set. Resat Bayer has pointed out several discrepancies in earlier versions of this data set. Dale Smith and Sara Mitchell also offered helpful advice at several stages of data collection. Of course, all coding decisions and data remain the fault of Paul Hensel.

VARIABLE LIST: TREATY-LEVEL DATA (MTOPTS.DTA)

Notes about Membership Dates

All dates are expressed in the form YYYYDD (e.g., 199901 for January 1999).

- Continuing membership in organizations or treaties beyond this current end of this data set is indicated by a month value of "99." This works well in analyses because this date of the end of membership clearly falls after the end of any actual date in the last year of the data set (any statistical program should recognize that an end date of "200199" comes after "200112", so there will be no confusion as to whether the treaty ended before an event in December).
- Missing data on the month of joining or leaving is indicated by a "00" in the month column (e.g., "198500"). A "-9" value indicates that the state in question has not joined the organization.

Note that where possible, the dates that are used for both organizations and states in this data set refer not to signatures but to being in legal force.

- This means that many organizations are regarded here as beginning operations a year or more after the initial signing of the founding treaty or charter, because of the need for enough signatory states to ratify the document before it takes legal effect.
- This also means that many states are regarded as joining organizations some time after originally signing the appropriate treaty, because of their need to ratify or otherwise approve the original signature. Where possible, the date listed is the date of deposit of ratification (which may be different from the date of ratification or accession).

General Variables

Num: Standard COW country code

Name: State name

COWbeg1, COWend1, COWbeg2, COWend2: Start & end dates of COW interstate system membership

- COW country codes and system membership dates are taken directly from the latest version of the COW interstate system membership list, available at <http://pss.la.psu.edu/intsys.html>. Some of the state names have been adapted to reflect current international usage/spelling or to simplify data usage (e.g., by removing commas to avoid confusion with .CSV data files, and by naming split Germany, Korea, and Vietnam so that the states in question are listed consecutively).
- System membership dates are included here because of the need to modify some states' dates of membership in certain institutions; where entities signed treaties or joined organizations before joining the COW system, their beginning dates for those treaties/organizations are recoded to the date when they joined the system.

Territorial Integrity Treaty Obligations

These variables indicate the number of treaty obligations during the year in question that called for respect of other treaty/institution members' territorial integrity.

TerAll: Territorial integrity commitments (respect all borders)

- This includes all treaty obligations that call for respect of states' existing borders. This is different from TerViol, described below, because the latter treaties explicitly limit the obligation to the avoidance of territorial changes by the threat or use of force; the treaties included in TerAll include blanket recognition of territorial integrity, without any limitation to the techniques that might be used.
- Qualifying treaties/institutions include the NAM, OIC, OAS, Andean Community, Locarno Pact, Helsinki Final Act, CIS, GUAM, SEEC, Collective Security Treaty Organization, OAU/African Union, ECCAS, Treaty on Amity and Cooperation in SE Asia, SAARC, CICA, and SCO. See the documentation file for an excerpt from each qualifying treaty describing the obligation.

TerViol: Territorial integrity commitments (no violent change)

- This includes all treaty obligations that call for the avoidance and/or nonrecognition of territorial changes by the threat or use of force. This is different from the first category because it implicitly leaves open the possibility of uncoerced changes through peaceful means, so this is not a blanket rejection of all territorial change.
- Qualifying treaties/institutions include the League/UN, Saavedra Lamas Pact, Montevideo

Convention, ECOWAS Protocol on Non-Aggression, and SADC Protocol on Politics, Defense, and Security Cooperation. See the documentation file for an excerpt from each qualifying treaty describing the obligation.

TerTot: Territorial integrity commitments (all borders+no violent change)

- This includes every territorial integrity commitment in either of the first two categories.

VARIABLE LIST: DYAD-YEAR-LEVEL DATA (MTOPSDYR)

This data set is based on the COW interstate system, which is available from the official COW web site. There is one observation for each (partial or full) year that each dyad is in the system (i.e., each year during which both states in this dyad were system members).

General Variables

Num1: COW country code - Lower number in dyad

Num2: COW country code - Higher number in dyad

Year: Year of observation

- Note that this is not a directed-dyad data set; there is only one observation per pair of states.

Pacific Settlement Treaty Obligations

These variables indicate the number of treaty obligations during the year in question that called for pacific settlement of disputes against other members of the same treaties/institutions. To be coded, both states must have been members of the same treaty/institution at some point during the same year.
